

Analyst

This is an exceptional role for an exceptional individual, highly customizable to leverage your strengths.

Our firm is a unique hedge fund adviser founded in 2013. We have an immediate opening for a full-time, San Francisco-based investment analyst who will assist with every aspect of the firm's business. This is an in-person role in the Financial District with occasional travel and self-directed work expected.

Applicants should be generalists who can anticipate work as varied as the fund's investments, ranging from warrant arbitrage to swap math to litigation funding. You may be asked to visit a barley mill, value a convertible bond, or interview an industry source, alongside traditional fundamental investment research tasks.

Candidates need not be a jack of all trades but should have attained mastery of at least one skill relevant to the investment process. Unusually capable specialists will also be considered, especially those with significant experience in short-selling, investigative journalism, or litigation.

You must possess uncompromisable ethics, and you will be expected to develop a high degree of trust and a close professional relationship with the portfolio manager and team. The role offers a self-motivated individual exposure to a wide range of investment arcana, white space to help shape a growing firm, and long-term potential participation in the economics of a successful hedge fund.

The office environment will at times comprise up to four people and one dog.

- Fundamental research and recommendation of investment ideas

You may also be expected to restock your own office snacks, water plants, suggest and implement your own fringe benefits, and perform other ad hoc tasks inherent to a small business.

Minimum Qualifications

Applicants must possess the following:

- Bachelor's degree or equivalent
- At least 2 years of post-collegiate work experience
- Significant investment experience in either a personal or professional capacity
- Passion for markets, healthy natural skepticism, and continuous desire to learn
